Half-year performance of underlying capital markets

Domestic, US and European government bond markets

The first half of 2025 was characterized by steeper yield curves, but there was divergence between bond markets: while in the United States we saw a decline in yields across the entire yield curve, in Europe this was only true at the front end of the curve, with yields on longer-term bonds rising. In the first quarter, the new US administration wasted no time in embarking on its promised institutional reforms and trade war. The prospect of tariffs damped growth prospects and raised long-term inflation expectations, making stagflation or even recession scenarios increasingly likely. In Europe, the German election results and growing doubts about the US's interest in maintaining the unity of the Western alliance prompted an unexpectedly rapid and decisive political response in the form of increased defense spending. The market quickly priced in the European growth outlook, which, combined with the expected increase in budget deficits, led to a surge in European yields. The trade war escalated further in April when President Trump announced shockingly high global tariffs. However, implementation was postponed and, as negotiations got underway, the markets found a more constructive narrative; by the end of the half-year, risky assets had recovered significantly and stock markets had risen to new highs. The bond market also recovered quickly, with yields approaching their late March levels after a temporary spike, while the yield curve remained much steeper in all markets.

We also saw divergence in central bank policies in developed countries. In Europe, the ECB cut its base rate four times, bringing it down from 3% to 2% during the half-year. In contrast, the Fed kept its benchmark rate in the 4.25-4.5% range, citing above-target inflation and a strong labor market. For the rest of the year, interest rate cuts are only expected in the US, but the Fed is not in an easy position: inflation is not showing any significant moderation, while the labor market appears to be showing signs of slowing down. In addition, the government is increasingly calling for interest rate cuts, which has so far achieved nothing other than undermining confidence in the institutional system.

At home, the bond market was characterized by movements similar to those in Europe, with yield levels rising across the entire yield curve in the first six months of the year. At the beginning of the year, inflation figures were higher than expected, which continuously pushed back expectations of interest rate cuts. As a result, bonds came under pressure. This was reinforced first by rising European yields and then by the escalation of the trade war. By the end of March, the 10-year bond yield had risen above 7.2%. Even with the improvement in international sentiment, there was no significant correction from this level, with long-term yields moving within a narrow range and the 10-year yield ending the half-year at 7%. As a result of the rise in yields, the MAX index, which comprises long-term government securities, underperformed the RMAX index, which tracks short-term bonds, with a return of 2.09% compared to 2.51%.

The MNB did not change its 6.5% base rate in 2025 with the aim of maintaining positive real interest rates and supporting the EURHUF exchange rate. The new central bank management has not changed its communication policy, remaining data-driven and cautious. Inflation rose to 5.6% at the beginning of the year, but then fell to 4.6%. The resulting real yield improved the attractiveness of the forint, which was also reflected in the EURHUF exchange rate, so after the decline in 2024, we saw a much more stable and strengthening domestic currency in the first half of 2025.

Domestic and Central and Eastern European stock markets

While the second half of 2024 was mostly sideways for Central and Eastern European stock markets, the beginning of 2025 brought an almost immediate change of direction. The return for the first six months was 23.03% in forint terms, a performance that propelled the CETOP index, representing the region's largest companies by turnover, among the best stock market indices globally. None of the sub-markets gave cause for complaint, but the greatest liquidity, and the new hope for an end to the Russian-Ukrainian war following Donald Trump's inauguration benefited the WIG20 index, which comprises the largest Polish companies, the most, with a performance of 29.81% in forints, while the Hungarian BUX returned 23.12% and the Czech PX 22.57%. There were important changes on the political front. In Romania, the liberal Nicușor Dan won the presidential election, while in Poland, Karol Nawrocki, supported by the Law and Justice party, won. Neither event dampened optimism, and fears that the previous ruling party would freeze or delay EU funds for Poland in the event of a Nawrocki victory appear to be unfounded for the time being. On the Budapest Stock Exchange, among the less liquid stocks, we saw a significant surge in the share prices of Állami Nyomda (+100.48%) and 4IG (+98.48%), while among the blue chips, Magyar Telekom's share price rose the most (+39.72%), but OTP Bank shares also continued to perform well, rising by more than 24%. The WIGBANK index, which tracks the Polish banking sector, also posted strong figures, following the European banking sector. The share price rose by 30.23% in forint terms during the period, and second-quarter reports also revealed that the Polish interest rate reduction cycle, which resumed in May after a hiatus of more than 1.5 years, did not significantly reduce interest margins, and the default rate in banks' loan portfolios remained very low. US politics caused a real rollercoaster ride not only on the capital markets but also in macroeconomic expectations. While at the beginning of the year it seemed that Donald Trump's main foreign policy focus would be on ending the Russian-Ukrainian war, it soon became clear that reducing his country's foreign trade deficit was a higher priority, so that, in line with the rest of the world, the countries of the European Union will also be forced to adjust to higher customs tariffs in the coming period. To counterbalance this, Germany has voted for record fiscal easing, the positive effects of which will also benefit the countries of the region, mainly through their industrial capacities. Nevertheless, the economic picture was mixed: according to questionnaire surveys, the Czech business and consumer confidence environment improved significantly, while the Polish manufacturing purchasing managers' index data reported moderate pessimism and a decline at the end of the first half of the year, compared to a neutral level at the end of 2024. Nevertheless, GDP growth was strong in both countries, with the Polish economy expanding by 3.4% and the Czech economy by 2.4%. The same rate was 0.1% for Hungary and 0.3% for Romania. Several regional central banks continued their interest rate reduction cycles, with Poland cutting rates by 75 basis points and the Czech Republic by 50 basis points, while Hungary and Romania kept their rates unchanged.

Global emerging stock markets

In the first half of the year, global capital markets were largely driven by US statements on tariffs, trade negotiations, and the resulting volatility. In February, the Chinese technology sector was particularly strong, with political support and a more relaxed regulatory environment helping to boost the value of undervalued stocks. When tariffs were announced in early April, global stock markets fell across the board, with the Chinese market being no exception, although investors hoped that government stimulus and a softening of the US stance would bring about a turnaround. Sentiment improved in May, with progress in negotiations and flash reports supporting stock markets. This also helped the market in China, but by the end of the month it was under pressure again. One of the brightest spots in Asia was the South Korean stock market, which was strongly fueled by confidence surrounding the election of the new president, whose reform efforts and more transparent corporate governance program helped attract capital inflows to the country. One of the weakest markets was Thailand, which fell by more than 20% due to political instability and border incidents. The Indian market moved similarly to the US market, recovering from its decline in May and reaching new highs for the year. South America performed well, with the exception of Argentina, which excelled in 2024. It will be worth following the Brazilian elections at the end of 2026. Turkey showed signs of stabilization after political news shook the market in March. The opposition leader was imprisoned, causing significant turbulence in the market, but as the half-year approached, the stock market recovered most of its losses because the economy was performing well. Oil-related companies strengthened amid tensions in the Middle East, while the market remained optimistic overall.

The MSCI Emerging Market Index, which represents the emerging market asset class, fell by 1.25% in forint terms, which can be partly attributed to the strength of the forint, but even taking this into account, it is not a good performance. The South Korean stock market performed best, rising 21.3% in forint terms, while other Asian markets closed the first half of the year with declines. The Turkish market fell by 18.7% in forint terms, mainly due to political reasons. Among the South American stock exchanges, Colombia performed best (+19.0%), but Brazil, the largest market, was not far behind (+12.7%).

Developed stock markets

Developed market stocks achieved mixed results in forint terms and experienced a much more volatile period than in the previous half-year. Quarterly reports published in the first two months of the year still showed strong profitability, and companies were optimistic about their investments in the short term. However, in the second half of February, stock markets began to price in the economic uncertainty expected in the near future. Based on macroeconomic data, US consumer spending remained strong at that time, and the fiscal expansion planned by the new German government also had a supportive effect on market sentiment. In Germany, the focus is primarily on infrastructure and defense investments, with smaller amounts of new funds also being allocated to clean energy sources and environmental protection, primarily through the relaxation of legal frameworks limiting public debt and budget deficits. These ambitious measures led to an increase in German GDP expectations in the short term. In March, however, President Trump began to implement the new tariff policy he had announced during his election campaign, imposing protective tariffs on imports primarily from countries allied with and closely associated with the United States (Mexico, Canada, EU). The market reacted nervously to this, with the index measuring stock market volatility reaching a seven-month high. In early April, however, the US's almost globally extended protective tariff measures came as a real shock to the stock markets, causing the leading developed market stock indices to fall by more than 10% in a short period of time. Shortly after the announcement, however, the US administration announced a 90-day postponement of the tariffs and urged its main trading partners to seek a negotiated solution. This led to a return of investor confidence and risk-taking, helping the US S&P 500 index to close the month in positive territory. The announcement in May of even higher tariffs on certain product groups did not significantly affect developed stock markets, and volatility remained moderate. The prevailing view was that the parties involved were interested in reaching an agreement and would succeed in doing so. At the same time, however, short-term expectations for the profitability of the European corporate sector declined significantly, and consumer confidence in the United States also began to show signs of weakness. The conflict that broke out between Iran and Israel caused a one-off, short-lived and minor spike in the expected volatility of the stock markets, but ultimately this materialized in lower prices to a limited extent.

During the first half of the year, the US Nasdaq 100 index fell by 5.58% (10.50% in forints), the S&P500 index fell by 4.51% (11.41% in forints), the German DAX index fell by 18.27% (13.52% in forints), the Japanese Nikkei index rose by 4.11% (3.62% in forints), the British FTSE 100 index rose by 8.42% (0.69% in forints) and the Western European Euro Stoxx 50 index rose by 8.42% (4.62% in forints).
